

RADIONICS DEVICES - PROCEDURE OF OPERATION

From "The Black Box" by W.E. Davis

Although the description of how to construct and operate this device may sound complicated, in actual practice, it is quite simple. To illustrate operation we will use the Heironymus machine, as it's the simplest to build and also to operate with a minimum of problems. Although psionic devices have become extremely sophisticated, it must be understood that the plans and discussions in this book relate to very simple devices that require the least amount of practice.

I would strongly urge my readers to start with the Heironymus machine, then progress to the De La Warr camera, if that is their desire. Time photography is a little more 'touchy' at first, than simple 'broadcasting'. The Heironymus device is the easiest of all radionic machines to both build and use.

Put a sample into the detector chamber - the "sample well". This sample may be a hank of hair, drop of blood, photograph (making sure that you have kept the negative) etc. depending upon what you desire to accomplish. As an example, let's follow the procedure for killing insect pests in the garden.

In the sample well you will put a photograph of the infected plant or field you want to treat. You may use a Q tip to swab the photo with an insecticide known to kill the particular type insect you wish to eliminate, or you may put a small container of the insecticide in the chamber along with the photo.

(The photo should be placed in the chamber face up, and the negative should NOT be used. Using the negative can produce results with which the beginner will not be able to cope.)

The insecticide you use will probably be 'standard' for that insect, but when you begin dealing with chemicals to eliminate plant disease, you will find that what works for one operator, may not be the best for another.

For example, Mrs. Murial Benjamen normally uses a crystal of tungsten nickel fluoride to stimulate growth and eliminate apple scab disease but found that Galen Heironymus preferred oxbile tablets. Both worked, for them, but other uses reported difficulty with any but their own favorite chemical. It would seem that a chemical will work successfully if YOU BELIEVE IN IT!

Only one photo at a time should be inserted in the well for treatment, (Uncontrolled gene crossing occurs when the pictures of two different plants are processed together! Be careful)! The photo should remain in the well for a few hours each day. (Some advanced operators find that only a few minutes are necessary).

With the machine plugged in, the fingers are used to lightly brush the stoker plate while the tuning electrode is slowly moved in relation to the lens or prism, A slight drag or 'adhesion' will be felt at the finest point of focus.

The first variable condenser is tuned while stroking continues until, again, a slight drag is encountered. The second condenser is then tuned in the same manner. In order, each of the variable resistors are adjusted in exactly the same way. All during this tuning process the operator must be thinking strongly of the desired effect. (Failure to operate can be attributed to faulty circuitry or damaged parts. Difficulty of operation can be laid to inexperience of the operator).

Once the machine is tuned, it's not necessary to retune it each day. Simply turn it on for a few hours and walk away. Results should be apparent within 2-3 weeks depending upon the size of the field or infestation, and also on the size of the plants (i.e.; trees take longer than weeds).

For photographic operation we recommend the De La Warr machine for best results. The Hieronymus device will take photos, but not easily or with the clarity of the Time Camera. If you wish to try however, a piece of film cut to fit into the construction paper envelope, is placed in the holder between the output electrodes, while tuning is taking place and the operator is concentrating.

Exposure time is lengthy and will vary, so only practice will determine how long to leave the film in the machine. Develop this film as you would any other black and white picture,

If the machine is used for astral communication, the head electrodes should be attached to the output side of the antenna. It usually helps if you have a photo of the deceased in the sample well, making sure, of course, that you still retain the negative.

Just as with the different chemicals used by different operators, some prefer to reverse" this hookup and attach the head electrodes to the sample well, in which case the 'tuned' electrodes act as antennas. (It has been found that creating even a slight north magnetic field around the operator at this time, greatly enhances reception).

For telepathic communication between two people, it is recommended that two machines be used. However if one of them has exhibited a telepathic ability it is possible to get results with both hooked to the same device. In this case, the sender wears the head electrodes connected to the sample well, and the receiver wears the one connected to the antenna. Should two way communication be desired it will probably be necessary to build two machines. For long distance telepathy, the head electrodes are usually attached to the sample well containing the receivers photo, blood sample, etc.

To influence someone without their knowledge is quite simple. As an example, if Love is the emotion you wish to impose upon them, their witness (hair, blood, saliva, skin scrapping, photo etc) is placed in the sample well along with your own. Each in a separate envelope! Head electrodes connected to the sample well at this time and operated by you each day will do the job. However, we must explain that in conjunction with this, a physical proximity will greatly enhance the signal.

Thus... the machine will work much faster if the person you're trying to influence is kept within your physical vicinity as much as possible while the machine is operating. The signals from the machine are very subtle and, as mentioned, are of an emotional nature. While they're operating, they go unnoticed by the receiver, who's mind may be occupied with other matters.

Hence your physical presence at the same time, allows your L Field to combine with the receivers and thus enhance the emotional message. Don't be impatient. All people are different and time of 'absorption' and reaction of the target will vary. The entire process can take from just a few days to several weeks.

If the machine is to be used to locate a missing person or unknown ore deposit etc., it is first necessary to construct a graph or chart of world longitude and latitude. The chapter on graph construction for atomic weights will demonstrate the method. As each main location is thus found, succeeding refinements are possible by using more refined graphs until exact position within a few acres or even yards, is accomplished.

Experiments in telekineses and similar projects, would of course use the machine in the same way as for telepathy.

If you desire the answers to questions, the device can be easily used to play a form of twenty questions, by first writing the questions down on a piece of paper, then touching each one with portable electrodes attached to the sample well. Start with general questions, and refine each succeeding one until you have a direct yes or no to a specific problem. For example, you may want to know the location of a particular person.

The first question would be "Is he/she in the U.S.? (a 'yes' answer produces a drag on the stroker plate). If the answer is yes, the next question could be "is he/she in the state of New York?" etc. Continue in this manner until your quest has been fully answered. This applies to any question you may have, and is limited only by knowing which questions to ask to get the correct final answer. (A medical question for example, would be hard to answer unless you knew the symptoms to ask about).

I sincerely hope this book has fulfilled all of your expectations. It was meant to enlighten and pique the interest of those whose minds are intrigued by the unknown.

By those seeking the truth. Until enough private individuals as well as scientific foundations and commercial companies make practical use of psionic devices such as we've described, the U.S. will continue to put itself in danger of psionic attack and fall further and further behind in the 'Psychic War', until even the smallest of countries will no longer need an atomic bomb to influence the world, a simple black box will do!
